ORDER

11 || E.K. McDANIEL, et al.,

Respondents.

14 This represented habeas matter under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 comes before the Court on petitioner's 15 motion (#22) to dismiss the unexhausted Ground 2, which will be granted, and for a final decision on 16 the merits of the remaining Ground 1, following upon the Court's prior show-cause order.

Background

18 Petitioner Gordon Carey challenges the weapon enhancement sentence on his Nevada state 19 conviction, pursuant to a guilty plea, of second-degree murder with the use of a firearm. He was 20 sentenced to two consecutive terms of 10 to 25 years.

21        In Ground 1, petitioner alleges that he was denied due process of law in violation of the Fifth 22 and Fourteenth Amendments because he was not sentenced under an amendment to the Nevada state 23 weapon enhancement statute, N.R.S. 193.165, that became effective after his offense but prior to his 24 sentencing.

25 On February 28, 2008, Carey pled guilty to second-degree murder with the use of a firearm in 26 the murder of George Kelly, Jr., on November 18, 2006. Under the law in place when Carey committed 27 the offense on November 18, 2006, N.R.S. 193.165 provided for an automatic sentencing enhancement 28 of an additional consecutive sentence equal to the sentence imposed on the primary offense in question.

1 when a firearm was used. The statute thereafter was amended to provide for a more flexible sentencing 2 structure on the weapon enhancement sentence, with a statutory maximum on the consecutive 3 enhancement sentence of 20 years. The amendment became effective on July 1, 2007.

4 It was expressly acknowledged in the written plea agreement and during the plea colloquy that 5 the parties remained free to argue their respective positions as to whether the amendment should be 6 applied to petitioner's sentencing. Carey entered the plea expressly with the understanding that the state 7 courts might reject his argument that the new law should apply to his case and hold that the amendment 8 did not apply to his sentencing.

9 On June 12, 2008, the matter came on for sentencing. The state district court rejected Carey's 10 argument that the amendment should apply to his case. The court sentenced him to equal and 11 consecutive terms of 10 to 25 years.

12 The judgment of conviction was filed the same day, and Carey timely appealed.

13 On July 24, 2008, the Supreme Court of Nevada issued its decision in State v. Second Judicial 14 District Court (Pullin), 124 Nev. 564, 188 P.3d 1079 (2008). In Pullin, the state supreme court held 15 that, under Nevada state law, the July 1, 2007, amendment to 193.165 did not apply retroactively to 16 offenders who committed their crimes prior to the effective date of the amendment but who were 17 sentenced after that date.

18 On August 25, 2009, in Carey's case, the Supreme Court of Nevada affirmed the district court 19 decision and sentencing. The state supreme court held:

20 21 The sole issue raised in this appeal is whether the district court 22 erred in refusing to apply the ameliorative amendments to the deadly 23 weapon enhancement statute that took effect after Carey committed the 24 underlying offense but before he was sentenced. Although Carey 25 recognizes that this court recently considered this issue in State v. Dist.
 26 Ct. (Pullin), 124 Nev. ___, 188 P.3d 1079 (2008), and held that the 2007 27 amendments to NRS 193.165 do not apply to offenses committed before the effective date of the amendments, Carey argues that federal constitutional law requires retroactive application of the amendments and urges this court to reconsider our decision in Pullin. We disagree with Carey's assertion that federal constitutional law requires retroactive application of the 2007 amendments to NRS 193.165, and we decline to reconsider our decision in Pullin. Consistent with our decision in Pullin, we conclude that Carey's argument lacks merit. . . .

28 #4, Ex. 13.

1 Petitioner filed the present federal petition through counsel on March 12, 2010. Initially, as 2 discussed further, infra, he presented only one ground. He alleged therein that due process requires that 3 the 2007 amendment to N.R.S. 193.165 be applied retroactively to his case because, although he 4 committed the offense prior to the effective date of the statute, he was sentenced after that date.

5 Governing Standard of Review

6 The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act (AEDPA) imposes a "highly deferential" 7 standard for evaluating state-court rulings that is "difficult to meet" and "which demands that state-court 8 decisions be given the benefit of the doubt." Cullen v. Pinholster, 131 S.Ct. 1388, 1398 (2011). Under 9 this highly deferential standard of review, a federal court may not grant habeas relief merely because 10 it might conclude that a decision was incorrect. 131 S.Ct. at 1411. Instead, under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d), 11 the court may grant relief only if the decision: (1) was either contrary to or involved an unreasonable 12 application of clearly established law as determined by the United States Supreme Court based on the 13 record presented to the state courts; or (2) was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in 14 light of the evidence presented at the state court proceeding. 131 S.Ct. at 1398-1401.

15 A state court decision on the merits is "contrary to" law clearly established by the Supreme Court 16 only if it applies a rule that contradicts the governing law set forth in Supreme Court case law or if the 17 decision confronts a set of facts that are materially indistinguishable from a Supreme Court decision 18 and nevertheless arrives at a different result. E.g., Mitchell v. Esparza, 540 U.S. 12, 15-16 (2003). A 19 decision is not contrary to established federal law merely because it does not cite the Supreme Court's 20 opinions. Id. Indeed, the Court has held that a state court need not even be aware of its precedents, so 21 long as neither the reasoning nor the result of its decision contradicts them. Id. Moreover, "[a] federal 22 court may not overrule a state court for simply holding a view different from its own, when the 23 precedent from [the Supreme] Court is, at best, ambiguous." 540 U.S. at 16. For, at bottom, a decision 24 that does not conflict with the reasoning or holdings of Supreme Court precedent is not contrary to 25 clearly established federal law.

26 A state court decision constitutes an "unreasonable application" of clearly established federal 27 law only if it is demonstrated that the state court's application of Supreme Court precedent to the facts 28 of the case was not only incorrect but "objectively unreasonable." E.g., Mitchell, 540 U.S. at 18.

1 To the extent that the state court's factual findings are challenged, the "unreasonable 2 determination of fact" clause of Section 2254(d)(2) controls on federal habeas review. E.g., Lambert 3 v. Blodgett, 393 F.3d 943, 972 (9th Cir. 2004). This clause requires that the federal courts "must be 4 particularly deferential" to state court factual determinations. Id. The governing standard is not 5 satisfied by a showing merely that the state court finding was "clearly erroneous." 393 F.3d at 973.
6 Rather, AEDPA requires substantially more deference to the state court's determination:

7               .... [I]n concluding that a state-court finding is unsupported by 8 substantial evidence in the state-court record, it is not enough that we 9 would reverse in similar circumstances if this were an appeal from a 10 district court decision. Rather, we must be convinced that an appellate panel, applying the normal standards of appellate review, could not reasonably conclude that the finding is supported by the record.

<sup>11</sup> Taylor v. Maddox, 366 F.3d 992, 1000 (9th Cir. 2004); see also Lambert, 393 F.3d at 972.

12 Under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1), state court factual findings are presumed to be correct unless 13 rebutted by clear and convincing evidence.

14 The petitioner bears the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that he is entitled 15 to habeas relief. Pinholster, 131 S.Ct. at 1398.

Discussion

17 As noted above, petitioner initially presented only a single ground alleging that due process 18 requires that the 2007 amendment to N.R.S. 193.165 be applied retroactively to his case because, 19 although he committed the offense prior to the statute's effective date, he was sentenced after that date.

20 In the original federal petition, petitioner contended that the state supreme court's rejection of 21 his constitutional claim constituted an unreasonable application of the following decisions of the United 22 States Supreme Court: McBoyle v. United States, 283 U.S. 25 (1931); United States v. Bass, 404 U.S.
23 336 (1971); Dobbert v. Florida, 432 U.S. 282 (1977); United States v. Lanier, 520 U.S. 259 (1997); and 24 United States v. Santos, 553 U.S. 507 (2008).

25 Petitioner contended that these decisions establish a doctrine of lenity applicable to the States 26 under the Due Process Clause that requires that, in the absence of contrary legislative intent, an 27 ameliorative sentencing statute must apply to all subsequent sentencing proceedings regardless of when 28 the underlying offense occurred.

1       Following screening, the Court directed petitioner to show cause why the petition should not 2 be dismissed with prejudice on the merits. The show-cause order directed petitioner to demonstrate, 3 in particular, that the state supreme court's rejection of his due process claim was either contrary to or 4 an unreasonable application of United States Supreme Court case law existing at the time of the state 5 supreme court's decision.

6       The Court incorporates Judge Reed's complete analysis in the show-cause order of the United 7 States Supreme Court decisions relied upon by petitioner as if set forth in full herein in extenso.<sup>1</sup> In 8 connection with his discussion of the specific individual cases, Judge Reed concluded as follows:

9               The foregoing four United States Supreme Court decisions [in 10 McBoyle, Bass, Lanier and Santos] were not presented with, nor did they 11 consider, a situation where subsequent statutory language provided for 12 a more flexible sentencing structure with respect to a crime than existed 13 at the time of the particular offense in question. The four decisions 14 clearly were not presented with any question as to whether the Due 15 Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires that the States retroactively apply such a statutory change to a sentencing for an offense committed prior to the effective date of the act unless the state legislature expressly provides for such retroactive effect. The four decisions made no holding on any such issue; and the four decisions did not contain any dicta discussing any such issue, which, again, clearly was not even remotely presented in those cases.[FN8]

16               [FN8] The Court additionally notes that all four 17 decisions concerned federal criminal prosecutions, and 18 the cases did not discuss the application of any federal 19 constitutional due process requirements to state criminal 20 prosecutions. The McBoyle, Bass, and Santos decisions 21 all discussed the rule of lenity only with regard to a 22 question of statutory construction, i.e., one of 23 determining Congressional intent as to a federal criminal 24 statute, not as a matter of a constitutional requirement. A 25 due process constitutional overtone to the fair warning 26 requirement was discussed only in Lanier and only in 27 passing. There certainly are constitutional overtones to 28 the fair warning requirement as a general matter.
 However, petitioner's reliance upon decisions addressing a question of federal statutory construction regarding the proper construction of an element of an offense in an effort then to dictate a constitutional result on an entirely distinct sentencing issue that was not even before the Supreme Court in those decision[s] is -- at its exceeding level best -- a stretch.

1#5, at 4-12.

1           In Dobbert, the United States Supreme Court did address a 2 sentencing issue. The Court did not, however, apply a rule of lenity, and 3 the term “lenity” does not even appear in the opinion. Nor did the Court 4 address a claim under the Due Process Clause of either the Fifth or 5 Fourteenth Amendment, and, once again, the phrase “due process” does 6 not even appear in the opinion.

7           Dobbert instead addressed a question of whether application of 8 a post-offense change to a state capital sentencing procedure violated the 9 Ex Post Facto Clause of Article I, Sec. 10 of the Constitution. Under the 10 old capital sentencing procedure prior to the date of the offense in 11 question, the death penalty was the presumed punishment unless the jury, 12 in its discretion, made a recommendation for mercy. 432 U.S. at 294, 97 13 S.Ct. at 2299. Under the new procedure adopted after the offense, death 14 no longer was the presumed punishment, and a jury determination of 15 either death or mercy was not binding, as the jury determination could 16 be overridden by the trial judge under specified criteria and subject to 17 automatic appellate review if a death sentence was imposed. 432 U.S.
 18 at 290-91, 97 S.Ct. at 2296-97.

19           The Supreme Court held that the retroactive application of the 20 change to the sentencing statute did not violate the Ex Post Facto Clause 21 for two reasons. First, the Court held that the retroactive application of 22 the statute did not violate the ex post facto prohibition because the 23 change was “procedural,” in that it “neither made criminal a theretofore 24 innocent act, nor aggravated a crime previously committed, nor provided 25 greater punishment, nor changed the proof necessary to convict.” 432 26 U.S. at 293, 97 S.Ct. at 2298. Second, the Court held that the retroactive 27 application of the statute did not violate the ex post facto prohibition 28 because the change was “ameliorative.” The Court noted that “[i]t is axiomatic that for a law to be ex post facto it must be more onerous than the prior law.” 432 U.S. at 294, 97 S.Ct. at 2299.

1           The Dobbert Court clearly made no holding that the State was 2 required to apply the ameliorative sentencing statute retroactively, and 3 no such issue was presented. Rather, the fact that the change was 4 ameliorative allowed the State to apply the change retroactively over an 5 ex post facto objection; it did not require that the change be applied 6 retroactively.

7           Application of the foregoing five United States Supreme Court 8 decisions to petitioner’s case reflects the following.

9           At the time of Carey’s offense, N.R.S. 193.165 provided – with 10 absolutely no ambiguity – that “any person who uses a firearm or other 11 deadly weapon . . . in the commission of a crime shall be punished by 12 imprisonment in the state prison for a term equal to and in addition to the 13 term of imprisonment prescribed by statute for the crime,” with the 14 sentence running consecutively with the sentence imposed for the crime.
 15 Nothing in the holdings of the four “rule of lenity” decisions relied upon 16 by petitioner would dictate anything other than a direct application of the 17 unambiguous language of the statute as of the time of the offense.
 18 Anyone reading the statute at the time of Carey’s offense would have 19 had not only a fair, but indeed an explicitly clear, warning that they 20 would be subjected to twice the punishment for committing the crime

1 with the use of a firearm.

2 Petitioner, of course, seeks to draw from the lenity cases an 3 overarching rule that any time that there – allegedly – is an ambiguity 4 on any statutory issue of any nature concerning a criminal conviction, the 5 Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires the States to 6 resolve the issue in the defendant’s favor. No such holding applicable 7 to this case was made in the four lenity cases cited. The four cases all 8 involved construction of legislative intent in defining the an element of 9 an offense rather than any question of retroactivity of a post-offense 10 change to a sentencing statute.

11 With regard to Dobbert, petitioner urges that Dobbert requires 12 that “the court must apply the ameliorative version of the statute in effect 13 as of the date of sentencing.” Dobbert was not presented with any such 14 issue, and clearly made no holding on any such issue. Dobbert instead 15 addressed an issue as to whether the Ex Post Facto Clause prohibited 16 such retroactive application of an ameliorative sentencing statute, and it 17 held that it did not. The Ex Post Facto Clause of course has no remotely 18 conceivable application to this case, given that the law in force on the 19 date of Carey’s offense was applied to his case. Dobbert made no 20 holding as to the Due Process Clause, much less one applicable to this 21 case, and the opinion does not even mention that provision of the 22 Constitution. Nothing in the opinion suggests the Due Process Clause requires that an ameliorative sentencing statute be applied retroactively.

23 Under the AEDPA, the state courts must follow the holdings of 24 the United States Supreme Court, not dicta in its opinions. See, e.g., Cheney v. Washington, 614 F.3d 987, 993-94 (9 Cir. 2010). If no 25 Supreme Court precedent creates clearly established federal law relating 26 to the legal issue that the habeas petitioner raised in state court, the state 27 court’s decision cannot be contrary to or an unreasonable application of 28 clearly established federal law. E.g., Brewer v. Hall, 378 F.3d 952, 955 (9th Cir. 2004). None of the five Supreme Court decisions relied upon by petitioner hold that the Due Process Clause requires States to apply an ameliorative sentencing statute retroactively absent a contrary expression of legislative intent. None of the five decisions were presented with such an issue. None of the decisions even discussed such an issue in dicta, which the Supreme Court of Nevada in any event would not have been bound to follow. The state supreme court’s rejection of petitioner’s claim based upon these United States Supreme Court decisions thus clearly was neither contrary to nor an unreasonable application of clearly established federal law under the AEDPA.

29 #5, at 8-11 (footnotes 9-11 omitted for brevity). See also id., at 12 (re: other federal and state cases).

30 In his show-cause response, petitioner, inter alia, made a claim for the first time in either state 31 or federal court that the Supreme Court of Nevada had denied him due process of law by unforeseeably 32 enlarging the meaning of a criminal statute through an allegedly unforeseeable and detrimental new 33 interpretation in Pullin that was applied retroactively to him. The Court thereupon gave petitioner an 34 opportunity to amend the petition to assert such a claim and, if he did so, to then demonstrate that the

1 petition was not subject to dismissal as a mixed petition that included an unexhausted claim.<sup>2</sup> Petitioner
 2 amended the petition to assert the new claim as Ground 2, and he sought to demonstrate that the claim 3 was exhausted. The Court held otherwise and denied petitioner's motion for a stay on the showing 4 made.<sup>3</sup> Petitioner thereafter has sought the dismissal of Ground 2, and the grant of that dismissal leaves 5 only Ground 1, the original claim considered by the Court in the original show-cause order.

6       Returning now to a consideration of the merits of Ground 1 on the original show-cause inquiry, 7 the Court holds, for the reasons outlined by Judge Reed in the show-cause order, that the state supreme 8 court decision rejecting petitioner's claim was neither contrary to nor an objectively unreasonable 9 application of clearly established federal law as determined by the United States Supreme Court.

10      In the show-cause response on the merits, petitioner posits the existence of a dichotomy in 11 applying § 2254(d)(1) between "fact-specific doctrine" cases and "more general doctrine" cases. As 12 petitioner's argument goes, in "fact-specific doctrine" cases, the petitioner cannot prevail under § 13 2254(d)(1) unless he can present a United States Supreme Court case on point that the state supreme 14 court case either was contrary to or unreasonably applied. In "more general doctrine" cases, in contrast, 15 a petitioner allegedly need not present a United States Supreme Court authority on point to carry his 16 burden under § 2254(d)(1). Petitioner posits that the question in his case "is whether the 'doctrine of 17 lenity' or the 'doctrine of fair warning' is a fact-specific doctrine . . . or a more general doctrine . . . ." Hardly 18 surprisingly, he posits that his issue involves a "more general doctrine," such that he purportedly 19 need not present apposite Supreme Court authority "on the same facts" supporting his position.<sup>4</sup>

20      Petitioner's argument is cut from whole cloth and has no bearing on the resolution of this case.
 21 Whereas the clear intent of AEDPA was to defer to state court adjudication of federal constitutional 22 claims where there was no contrary apposite Supreme Court doctrine, petitioner's sui generis argument 23 would supplant deferential review under AEDPA with in effect de novo review in precisely the context 24 where AEDPA mandates deference, where there are no clear Supreme Court guideposts.

28      <sup>4</sup>#6, at 3-10.

1       Indeed, petitioner's "more general doctrine" argument in fact proves too much -- at least vis-à-2 vis petitioner establishing a basis for relief under § 2254(d)(1) – under the analysis actually followed 3 by the Supreme Court in applying AEDPA. The generality of an alleged rule in Supreme Court 4 jurisprudence makes it harder for a petitioner to establish a basis for relief under § 2254(d)(1), not 5 easier:

6           A state court's determination that a claim lacks merit precludes 7 federal habeas relief so long as "fairminded jurists could disagree" on the 8 correctness of the state court's decision. Yarborough v. Alvarado, 541 9 U.S. 652, 664, 124 S.Ct. 2140, 158 L.Ed.2d 938 (2004). And as this 10 Court has explained, "[E]valuating whether a rule application was 11 unreasonable requires considering the rule's specificity. The more 12 general the rule, the more leeway courts have in reaching outcomes in case-by-case determinations." Ibid. "[I]t is not an unreasonable application of clearly established Federal law for a state court to decline to apply a specific legal rule that has not been squarely established by this Court." Knowles v. Mirzayance, 556 U.S. ___, ___, 129 S.Ct.
 1411, 1413–14, 173 L.Ed.2d 251 (2009) (internal quotation marks omitted).

13 Harrington v. Richter, 131 S.Ct. 770, 786 (2011). Petitioner's argument therefore detracts from rather 14 than supports his claim. If what petitioner indeed is relying on are only broad, nonspecific precepts 15 floating freely in Supreme Court jurisprudence that have no doctrinal context specific to this case, then 16 what he has tended to establish is that the state supreme court's rejection of his argument based upon 17 such broad, nonspecific precepts was neither contrary to nor an unreasonable application of clearly 18 established federal law as determined by the United States Supreme Court.

19           In all events, the difficulty for petitioner is not that the case might be a "fact-specific doctrine" 20 case rather than a "more general doctrine" case but instead is that there is no doctrine in a holding of 21 the Supreme Court that supports his claim that was contrary to the state supreme court's decision or that 22 was unreasonably applied by that court. As outlined in the show-cause order, none of the Supreme 23 Court decisions relied upon by petitioner hold that the Due Process Clause requires States to apply an 24 ameliorative sentencing statute retroactively absent a contrary expression of legislative intent, none of 25 the decisions were presented with such an issue, and none of the decisions even discussed such an issue 26 in dicta.

27           There simply is no clearly-established constitutional "doctrine of lenity" under Supreme Court 28 jurisprudence applicable to the States – whether "fact-specific," "more general," or otherwise.

1 Petitioner has taken federal criminal cases applying a doctrine of lenity in construing Congressional 2 intent as to the elements of federal criminal statutes and jumped to the conclusion, with no supporting 3 Supreme Court authority, that there is an overarching constitutional “doctrine of lenity” that must be 4 applied to and by the States under the Fourteenth Amendment. While a petitioner need not cite a case 5 exactly factually on point to establish an unreasonable application of, e.g., Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S.
 6 307 (1979), there is Supreme Court doctrine applying a constitutional sufficiency of the evidence 7 standard to the States. There is no clearly-established Supreme Court doctrine applying a constitutional 8 rule of lenity to the States, much less constitutional doctrine mandating that States must apply 9 ameliorative sentencing statutes retroactively. That is why petitioner cannot prevail under § 2254(d)(1) 10 in this case, not because there is no Supreme Court case factually on all fours with his case. What 11 petitioner lacks is constitutionally apposite doctrine, not simply a case with apposite facts.<sup>5</sup>

12 Petitioner’s remaining arguments in his show-cause response in essence quarrel with the Nevada 13 state supreme court’s application of Nevada state law. Petitioner acknowledges that while N.R.S.
 14 193.165 is not ambiguous, he maintains that there is ambiguity as to whether the Nevada legislature 15 intended for the 2007 amendment to apply retroactively. The Supreme Court of Nevada resolved the 16 issue of the retroactive application of the statute adversely to petitioner, and that court is the final arbiter 17 of Nevada state law. Petitioner has failed to demonstrate that the state supreme court’s rejection of his 18 associated due process claim – i.e., the claim that he exhausted – was either contrary to or an 19 unreasonable application of clearly established federal law as determined by the United States Supreme 20 Court. That is the end of the matter for purposes of federal habeas review. Petitioner’s arguments as 21 to alleged ambiguity in state law that the state supreme court saw differently and/or as to assorted 22 “conundrums” in Nevada case law beg the question and do not provide a basis for federal habeas relief.
 23 The federal courts do not oversee state courts’ application of state law.

26 <sup>5</sup>See also #5, at 8 n.8 & 10 (discussion of fair warning requirement in show-cause order). Accord Gollehon v.
 27 Mahoney, 626 F.3d 1019, 1027-28 (9th Cir. 2010)(the rule of lenity simply is a canon of statutory construction, and a 28 federal habeas court has no authority to apply it to countermand a state supreme court’s holding that there is no state statutory ambiguity warranting its application; there is nothing in the federal constitution that would require a state court to apply a rule of lenity in interpreting a state statute)(as emphasized in the opinion).

1       The sole exhausted claim before the Court in Ground 1 accordingly does not provide a basis for 2 federal habeas relief.<sup>6</sup>

3       IT THEREFORE IS ORDERED that petitioner's motion (#22) to dismiss Ground 2 is 4 GRANTED and that Ground 2 is DISMISSED without prejudice for lack of exhaustion.<sup>7</sup>

5       IT FURTHER IS ORDERED that the sole remaining ground in the petition, Ground 1, is 6 DISMISSED with prejudice on the merits.

7       IT FURTHER IS ORDERED that a certificate of appealability is DENIED. Jurists of reason 8 would not find the district court's rejection of petitioner's exhausted claim to be debatable or wrong.
 9 As discussed herein and in the prior show-cause order (#5), none of the United States Supreme Court 10 decisions upon which petitioner relies include dicta, much less a holding, that was contrary to the 11 decision of the Supreme Court of Nevada in this case or that was unreasonably applied by that court.
 12 Petitioner's merits argument would be strained at best even on a de novo review. A fortiori, on 13 deferential review under § 2254(d)(1), it is clear that petitioner cannot establish a basis for relief on the 14 only exhausted claim presented. Jurists of reason additionally would not find debatable or wrong the 15 district court's holdings that the new federal claim that petitioner raised for the first time in his show-16 cause response is unexhausted and that a stay was not warranted on the showing made. See ## 12 & 17 18.

19       <sup>6</sup>The Court afforded petitioner an opportunity to present supplemental argument based upon Dorsey v. United 20 States, 132 S.Ct. 2321 (2012). #8, at 9. It does not appear that petitioner relies upon Dorsey, albeit with good reason.
 21 In Dorsey, the Supreme Court held that the more lenient penalties under the Fair Sentencing Act applied to offenders
 22 who committed an offense prior to the effective date of the Act but who were sentenced after that date. Dorsey stated no 23 constitutional rule, much less one applicable to the States, as the case turned upon a construction of Congressional 24 intent. If anything, the involved discussion of legislative intent in Dorsey as well as the federal circuit split leading to 25 the grant of certiorari in Dorsey emphasizes how wide the range of permissible decision was previously in 2009 when 26 the Supreme Court of Nevada decided Carey's appeal – in deciding a question of Nevada legislative intent by the final arbiter of Nevada state law. Dorsey construed Congressional intent; it did not hold that Congress could not do other than what the Supreme Court ultimately concluded that it intended. In all events, even if the 2012 decision in Dorsey were dead on point, it would not demonstrate that the 2009 Supreme Court of Nevada decision in Carey's case was either contrary to or an unreasonable application of clearly established law as determined by the United States Supreme Court. "Clearly established federal law" under § 2254(d)(1) refers to Supreme Court case law at the time that the state court adjudicated the merits. E.g., Greene v. Fisher, 132 S.Ct. 38 (2011).

27       <sup>7</sup>While the dismissal of Ground 2 is without prejudice as to the ground itself, nothing in the Court's order 28 precludes the application of, inter alia, timeliness and successive-petition rules to a later federal petition or other attempt to present that ground or other grounds in subsequent proceedings.

1 IT FURTHER IS ORDERED that, pursuant to Rule 4 of the Rules Governing Section 2254
2 Cases, the Clerk of Court shall provide respondents notice of the action taken herein by effecting 3 informal electronic service of the order and judgment upon Catherine Cortez Masto as per the Clerk's 4 current practice, together with regenerating notices of electronic filing to her office of the prior filings 5 herein. No response is required from respondents, other than to respond to any orders of a 6 reviewing court.

7 The Clerk shall enter final judgment accordingly, in favor of respondents and against petitioner, 8 dismissing this action with prejudice.

9 DATED this 29th day of March, 2013.
